Executive Vice President and Chief Lending Officer Martha Foulon-Tonat is a founding member of EagleBank, and has led the Bank's lending efforts ever since. As a graduate student in International Affairs at American University in 1980, she side-stepped into banking...simply for "the banking hours that would allow her time for evening classes." But, for some reason—perhaps because of her passion for helping people realize their entrepreneurial dreams and her enthusiasm for mentoring and guiding young lenders to their full potential—she remained a community banker throughout her career. Martha's experience spans five community banks in Maryland and the District of Columbia, beginning in branch banking, then quickly migrating to commercial lending. After starting a family, she left DC and went to work for Allegiance Bank in Bethesda. Martha graduated with honors from Stonier Graduate School of Banking in 1997, and in 1998, joined other key members from Allegiance to help found EagleBank in 1998, serving as Senior Lender. She has overseen loan growth during the Bank's 11-plus years...to a volume of nearly $1.4 billion today. For Martha, however, it is not all about watching the bank or her career grow. It is more about watching peoples' dreams take shape and their new businesses turn into realities. She also still finds personal satisfaction in mentoring and watching young bankers become professional lenders, who then provide the solutions for more EagleBank business customers to take off and succeed.
